The evolution of statistics in the Canadian Football League has been a gradual one, beginning in the old Canadian Rugby Union. Following the Second World War the approach to the game of football in Canada became more formalized and with the approach came the desire to maintain statistics for both the clubs and the players. In 1950, Bill Hawrylak of Regina (Western Statistician) with the able assistance of Calgary Stampeders statistician Greg Fulton embarked upon such a program. While Mr. Hawrylak compiled the week-by-week stats of the Western Conference, it was Mr. Fulton who designed and refined the format in which the stats of a particular game would be recorded, from the various individual departmental figures to the hand-written play-by-play for the statistical crews. By 1954, the idea of individual statistics had caught on in the Eastern Conference with Gordon Walker of Toronto assuming the post of Eastern Statistician. The CFL's first Official Record Manual was published in 1966 by Greg Fulton for then Commissioner G. Sydney Halter. In 1967 Mr. Fulton joined the League office as Secretary-Treasurer and League Statistician. As time progressed and the League office expanded in Toronto, Gordon Walker was appointed the League's first Director of Information and League Statistician in 1973. As well as editing the Record Manual annually, Gordon expanded the information and files in the League office on player, team and League history. Upon his retirement in 1982, Victoria Gates was appointed League Statistician and editor of the current Record Manual.

The Tommy Alison Trophy and the facts surrounding its disappearance still evoke interest from football fans, particularly those interested in where it is today. Researching its history, it has been learned that the trophy was not presented for the first time in 1951 as was originally thought, but in 1950. The trophy donated by the Toronto Argonaut Football Club was to be presented annually to the team scoring the most points during the regular season schedule of the Interprovincial Rugby Football Union (Big Four). It was first given by THC Alison of the Argos to Eric Craddock of the Montreal Alouettes at the Canadian Rugby Union annual meeting on January 21, 1950 in recognition of the Alouettes scoring prowess in 1949. That year the club scored 295 points in Big Four games. Toronto won it in 1950 with 291 points with Hamilton winning it in 1951 and 1952 with 229 and 268 points. Between 1953 and 1956, Montreal won the trophy four times with totals of 292, 341, 388 and 478 points. The feeling among some people in the Big Four was that the trophy was diminishing the stature of the Dixon Trophy which was given for finishing first place in the standings. In the summer of 1957, the trophy was in the possession of Big Four president Robert Moran, but no one knows if Ottawa received it for scoring 388 points.

Gerry (Kid Dynamite) James is the only player in the history of the Schenley Awards program to win one of the awards the first year it was presented, and then win that award again during his career. (This does not include the award for the Most Outstanding Rookie.) James was named the Most Outstanding Canadian Player in the Canadian Football League in 1954, the first year it was awarded and won it again in 1957. He was nominated by his team for the award four times and in 1954 also received an automatic nomination for the Most Outstanding Player Award which was part of the criteria at the time in the balloting for the outstanding Canadian award. James was an all-star fullback with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers from 1952 until 1963 and a winner of four Grey Cup Games.
